WEATHER KEY POINTS

01/08/22 - 01/14/22

Saturday - Friday

- Dry weather will persist across the state for the weekend and into Monday, though some very light rain is possible at times near the coast. Some additional light showers are possible across southern California on Monday.
- Periods of breezy offshore winds are expected across southern California through Wednesday, with gust speeds of 25-40 mph most likely in prone locations.
- Areas of dense fog are possible through the next week, which could impact travel across the state.
- A few rounds of light precipitation are also expected to the state for the middle and end of next week, with light snow possible over the higher mountains. At this time, no widespread significant impacts are expected.
